It's all because of the unnatural components of the "soap" that are stripping your skin of its natural oils. Did you even take a glance at the ingredients list of what soap you're using? I'm pretty sure you have not. It's too long, filled with words you can't even understand, let alone, pronounce. It is easy to unknowingly subject your body to the harmful components of these "cleaning products" and soaps. The beautiful thing about homemade soaps is that you can do it with your chosen ingredients and fragrance. Soap making at home is fun and adventurous. Handcrafted soaps are enriched with vitamins, minerals, and beneficial oils because they are made with natural skin nourishing ingredients that won't dry out your epidermis like those that soap sold in the stores. If you have never tried making your own soap, try one, and you will be surprised that it is not as difficult as you think. If you are new in soap making, I will advise you first start with melt and pour process. The "melt and pour" process is the most comfortable place to begin. Using a premade soap base, all you need to do is melt it down on the stove or in the microwave, then stir in fragrances, minerals, color, herbs, and whatever other ingredients your heart desires. Soap making has its rules, pros, and cons: to be a successful soap maker you have to adhere strictly to measurement and weight because that will determine the result of your final product. Your soap making ingredient (lye and fats/oil) will through a controlled but straightforward process chemically bond these two ingredients into a new compound-SOAP.It will undergo a process called saponification. Every soap making from the scratch involves lye. In homemade soap, you should always use 100% lye (sodium hydroxide or potassium hydroxide) no substitute. The good thing is that no-lye will remain in your finished product. In this book, I outlined the essential ingredient needed in the soap making process. And some of the soap making equipment to be used. Soap is a necessary item used everyday for health and cleaning purposes: it kills germs, fights off bacteria, but it's not without its own faults. At least, traditional soap or mass-produced soap. Traditional soap or mass-produced soap often comes with a lot of plastic packaging -- either in a plastic container with a plastic pump and even soap bars sometimes come wrapped in arbitrary plastic -- and can even contain some shady chemicals and additives. The chemical cocktails and harsh additives usually leave the skin irritated, overly cleansed, and dry. Some of these chemicals are shown to cause cancer, such as triclosan. If you're looking to skip the soap drama (the potential chemical toxicity), then a great alternative is to make your own all-natural soap at home. Homemade soap is not only therapeutic and fun to make, but it's a great way to infuse the healing properties of plants into something that touches our skin daily. Homemade soap consists of base oils, butters, lye, and additives that are usually from a natural source. Almost any natural additive can be added to homemade soap to treat various skin conditions and complaints while reducing unnecessary chemical intake, resulting in beautiful skin. Natural soap actually relieves irritated skin, many times improving psoriasis and eczema. Are you ready to learn how to make all-natural soap at home? Do you want to have access to multiple homemade soap recipes that suits your need? In this book, you'll learn how to make healthy organic soap from the comfort of your home. With over 30 soap recipes, you can never get enough of your flexibility and creativity in making the best of soaps at home. Get a copy now to get started!
