Instead, she focuses on avoiding her oncologist, playing wicked pranks on her mother-in-law and getting her affairs in order, which includes hiring a nanny to take care of the kids after she's gone. Having Julia Soanes in his house would not have been Nick's first choice.

Julia smells of memories. And sex. Something Nick hasn't had in a while. Nick's moral objections, however, are short-lived. The woman he loves is dying. He can honor her dying wish. Can't he?
